

The Doris Day Animal League at work

- Championed new federal law to facilitate use of alternatives to animal tests.
- Championed new law creating a federal offense for the production of videos depicting illegal acts of animal cruelty.
- Championed first state law in California to require use of alternatives to animal tests.
- Championed first-ever federal appropriations for research, development and validation of non-animal, alternative tests.
- Negotiated settlement on major federal animal testing program, saving thousands of animals from animal testing.
- Original member of the Coalition for Consumer Information on Cosmetics, which administers the toughest international "no animal testing" policy for cosmetics and household products.
- Founding partner in GeesePeace, a program that provides humane solutions to wildlife conflicts.

There are many other issues with which the Doris Day Animal League is involved. These range from international efforts to end the use of animals in product testing, to the preservation of America's wild horses and burros to ending puppy mill breeding practices.

THE WORK NEVER STOPS, BUT THE RESULTS MAKE IT MORE THAN WORTHWHILE.

A COMMITMENT TO COMPASSION

“THE ANIMALS CANNOT DO ANYTHING ABOUT THE AGONIZING TORTURES INFLICTED UPON THEM EVERYDAY. THEY CAN’T LOBBY CONGRESS, AND THEY CAN’T VOTE. WE CAN, THOUGH. JOIN US IN SPEAKING FOR THEM.”

A COMMITMENT TO COMPASSION AND CARING HAS TRANSLATED INTO WINS FOR THE ANIMALS.

Now in its second decade, the Doris Day Animal League is one of the largest and most influential animal rights organizations in the United States.

The Doris Day Animal League's influence has been felt in the United States Congress, in all 50 states, in cities and in communities throughout the country... and around the world. The issues are many. The common denominator is that DDAL works to protect animals and the people who love them.

Doris Day has long been known for her work with animals. She co-founded Actors and Others for Animals in the early 1970's. She established the non-profit Doris Day Pet Foundation in 1977 which found homes for thousands of unwanted animals, organized programs for free spaying and neutering, fed and provided medical attention to pets whose families needed financial aid, and gave advice and counsel to people throughout the world. She even hosted a television show devoted to the care of her "four-legged friends."

The culmination of Doris Day's work on behalf of animals and animal-related causes was the establishment of the Doris Day Animal League in 1987.

The Doris Day Animal League is a nonprofit, national citizens lobbying organization formed to focus attention on issues involving the protection of animals.

Experience has taught us that the Doris Day Animal League—in the tradition of the American democratic system itself—can help enforce existing laws and pass tough new ones by getting individual citizens involved in the process.

The Doris Day Animal League has taught literally millions of people how to effectively reach their elected representatives to get their voices heard.

Through targeting phone calls to local legislators, sending thousands of signed petitions to the U.S. Congress, or sponsoring a local initiative to encourage spaying and neutering, everyone can speak for the animals.

Though a series of programs, the League provides people with the names of their congressional representatives and senators and with summaries of important animal protection issues. Members and other constituents are encouraged to write, call and visit to express their concerns to their elected officials—much in the way Americans have spoken out over the years about issues related to the environment, consumer protection, women's and civil rights. The successful examples are there for the members to see, and the Doris Day Animal League has proven that it works with animal protection legislation, as well.

ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES HEAR OUR VOICES

Based in Washington, D.C., the Doris Day Animal League is staffed by a team dedicated to animal protection issues. They can be found as frequently on Capitol Hill as in a Midwestern Town Hall meeting, at a global conference on animal rights or leading efforts in communities throughout the United States related to animal protection.

U.S. Representative Tom Lantos, California, at Doris Day Animal League news conference.

Working with members of the House of Representatives and Senate both in Washington, D.C. and their home states and districts, the goal is to pass laws to protect animals anywhere they are mistreated. Many states and cities have also benefited from the Washington staff's help in drafting legislation, organizing support and actual lobbying for or against legislation. The issues are many, and they constantly change. The Doris Day Animal League stands ready to meet these challenges.
